Columbia Business School, New York (2001- )

Corporate Innovator

I teach this subject as a graduate-level course, and have a book forthcoming on the subject.

Strategic Intuition

I have published six books on strategic intuition since arriving at Columbia: The Art of Ideas (2019, co-author Amy Murphy), The Seventh Sense (2015), Creative Strategy: A Guide for Innovation (2012); Strategic Intuition: The Creative Spark in Human Achievement (2007); The Art of What Works: How Success Really Happens (2003); and Napoleon's Glance: The Secret of Strategy (2002). I teach the subject as elective courses in our MBA and Executive MBA programs, and as shorter sessions in custom and open Executive Education programs. In October 2007 the Financial Times named me a 'Professor to Watch' on the strength of my work on strategic intuition. Strategy + Business magazine named Strategic Intuition the best Strategy book of 2007. In 2013 I received the Dean's Award for Teaching Excellence.

Other Teaching

I occasionally taught the core MBA and EMBA core courses on strategy formulation; helped pioneer Master Classes with courses on education, economic development, and strategic intuition; helped Professor Trevor Harris develop a school-wide core curriculum on General Motors; founded New York City immersion courses; helped the Vice Dean for Teaching to develop and implement best practices in core courses.

I co-developed with Professor Sheena Iyengar two new courses: Think Bigger, to apply strategic intuition in workshop form; and Corporate Innovator, to help someone with a new idea put it into action in a big company. We co-wrote two books, due out in early 2022: Think Bigger and The Think Bigger Workbook.

Ideas at Work

I wrote and co-wrote more than 60 pieces on other faculty's research for Ideas at Work, the School's online magazine for practitioners across all our disciplines.

Speaking

I have spoken many times on strategic intuition for extra-curricular School audiences, such as recruiters, visiting families, admitted students, and alumni groups around the country and overseas. I also speak on the same subject at corporate events.

Economic Development

In 2009 I co-authored a book with Dean Glenn Hubbard of Columbia Business School on local business vs. aid in poor countries, The Aid Trap: Hard Truths About Ending Poverty.

Ford Foundation

New York (1993-2001)

I was an internal innovation advisor to the global grant-making staff of the Ford Foundation. I pioneered the first organization-wide innovation methods across all fourteen offices around the world, for a global budget of $500 million per year.

West Africa (1987-1993)

After a year as a Program Officer in Ford's West Africa office, I became Representative, with overall responsibility for grant-making and management. Our annual budget was just over $5 million and a staff of fifteen reported to me. I helped establish the West Africa Rural Foundation, West Africa's first grant-making organization wholly run and governed by Africans.

Economist / consultant (1983-1986)

I consulted as an economist in Africa for the World Bank, USAID, the United Nations Development Program, and Winrock International, as a specialist in modifying economic plans to take account of local economic systems.

Secondary school teacher, Botswana (1975-6)

For two years after college, I taught secondary school in a village in Botswana.
